

 A very gratifying feature of the late State Fair was the perfect order and decorum observed by the large assembly, not only upon the grounds, but throughout the whole city. No disorder, no rowdyism of any kind, came to our notice, and while great praise is due to the promptness and efficiency of the Marshalls, and the Committee, the people themselves deserve equal credit. Such a gathering of people could not have taken place at the North, without the constant activity of a strong police and dozens of arrests for thefts.